Designation marks progress in Asana’s commitment to secure, compliant, and collaborative work at scale

SAN FRANCISCO--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Jul. 24, 2025-- Asana (NYSE: ASAN) (LTSE: ASAN), a leading work management platform for human + AI coordination, today announced it has achieved a Federal Risk and Authorization Management Program (FedRAMP®) “In Process” designation at the Moderate level and is now listed on the FedRAMP Marketplace. This milestone signals Asana’s commitment to meeting the rigorous security and compliance standards required to serve public sector agencies and organizations in highly regulated industries.

These teams often face a common challenge: how to move fast and work collaboratively while navigating strict security, compliance, and privacy standards. Legacy tools often sacrifice usability in the name of compliance, slowing work down and creating operational silos.

“We’ve seen growing demand from public sector and enterprise teams – especially those in regulated industries – for secure, intuitive tools to stay aligned, deliver on mission-critical work, and modernize efficiently,” said Sean Cassidy, Head of Security at Asana. “FedRAMP In Process is an important step in our effort to meet those needs and empower customers operating in high-compliance, high-stakes environments.”

While many government teams already rely on Asana in regulated settings, FedRAMP “In Process” reflects our intent to meet the formal requirements for federal adoption. It also underscores a broader shift: mission-driven teams – in government and beyond – are prioritizing platforms that enable faster, more coordinated work without compromising on security or compliance.

Asana already supports government and public-sector teams through its commercial product, helping cross-functional departments coordinate complex work more effectively. In the second half of the year, Asana plans to introduce a new offering tailored to the needs of public sector organizations – further supporting secure, compliant, and mission-driven collaboration at scale.
